

The mountains got their first coat of snow at the end of September, though it isn't quite enough to protect you from hitting rocks. Where the snow is drifted provides the best coverage, but is also the most likely place to trigger a small slide. A small slide would be painful if it pushes you into the many exposed rocks. Photo: G. Antonioli

Advisory Region

Bridger Range

Longitude

-110.98W

Latitude

45.92N

Avalanche Details: Small wind slab near Fairy Lake

Forecast link: GNFAC Avalanche Forecast for Thu Oct 3, 2019GNFAC Avalanche Forecast for Thu Oct 10, 2019

Bridger Range, 2019-10-02