

A layer of near surface facets that formed in early January did not produce unstable results in stability tests. This pit was dug on a NE facing slope around 9000 ft. This layer exists in many locations throughout the southern portions of our forecast area. Although it appears to be gaining strength, this layer should be looked for and assessed before committing to steep slopes. Photo GNFAC

Advisory Region
Southern Madison

Forecast link: GNFAC Avalanche Forecast for Mon Jan 14, 2013GNFAC Avalanche Advisory for Wed Jan 16, 2013

