

GNFAC Avalanche Advisory for Tue Jan 30, 2018

Good Morning. This is Doug Chabot with the Gallatin National Forest Avalanche Advisory issued on Tuesday, January 30th at 7:00 a.m. Today's advisory is sponsored by MAP Brewing in cooperation with the Friends of the Avalanche Center. This advisory does not apply to operating ski areas.

Mountain Weather

Last night an inch of snow fell in the mountains near Cooke City and West Yellowstone. Under cloudy skies winds are out of the southwest at 40 mph with gusts near 70 mph at the ridgelines. Mountain temperatures are in the 20s and this morning a strong frontal passage brings snow in the mountains and possibly rain in the valleys. By this evening 1-2" will blanket the mountains with Cooke City getting 4".

Snowpack and Avalanche Discussion

Southern Madison Southern Gallatin Lionhead Range Cooke City

On Sunday, outside Cooke City, skiers triggered two small avalanches (photo, photo), and yesterday another small slide was triggered on a wind-loaded slope (40' wide; 12-18" deep). Around Lionhead the snowpack remains weaker than other areas from sugary snow near the ground, but it is getting more difficult to trigger avalanches with each passing day. I saw this twice in the last week, once in Lionhead (video), and again this Sunday in Cabin Creek in the southern Madison Range (video). In general, our snowpack in the southern mountains is strengthening.

Wind speeds are 20-40 mph out of the southwest and a few slopes will be wind-loaded. Wind slabs are not widespread, but skiers triggered a small one yesterday and another skier saw a 3' deep avalanche on a north-facing slope up Republic Creek in Cooke City. For today, human triggered avalanches are possible and the danger is rated MODERATE on all slopes.

Bridger Range Northern Gallatin Northern Madison

The mountains near Bozeman and Big Sky are mostly stable. Alex was in the Bridger Range on Saturday and found the new snow was bonded and winds were not forming drifts. In the last two days, strong wind scoured many slopes and reports from ski patrols indicate there is not much loose snow left to blow around. Field observations from the northern Gallatin and northern Madison Ranges all indicate good snow stability. If you went out of your way looking for trouble you might find a small wind pillow near the ridgeline that could avalanche, but in general, avalanches are unlikely and the danger is rated LOW.

If you get out and have any avalanche or snowpack observations to share, drop a line via our website, email (mtavalanche@gmail.com), phone (406-587-6984), or Instagram (#gnfacobs).
