

Saw a small recent looking storm slab avalanche that appeared to be naturally triggered above the road on a south facing slope around 6000'. It ran all the way across the slope ~30' wide and ~4" deep within the recent snow. The snow didn't move far enough to reach the road. The slope was quite steep-- we didn't measure but I'd estimate 40*.

Photo: H Meyers

Advisory Region

Bridger Range

Longitude

-110.93W

Latitude

45.85N

Avalanche Details: Small Storm Snow Avalanches in Brackett Creek

Forecast link: GNFAC Avalanche Forecast for Sun Jan 5, 2025

Bridger Range, 2025-01-04